

THINK. FEEL. DO.

How to win consumer loyalty through sustainability we THINK that waste, litter and other environmental infractions are bad

of Americans think that the average person should be taking concrete steps to reduce his or her environmental impact

80%

80% of us judge others for environmental infractions ...

69%

... and we judge ourselves – 69% of us would be embarrassed to be caught throwing trash out the car window

we FEEL that the environment is worth protecting

78% of us feel some sense of personal responsibility to change daily purchase habits and practices to positively impact the environment

76%

76% of us believe “people have a right to clean air and water”

82%

82% of Millennials are worried about how climate change will impact their children's quality of life

we do NOTHING

Ok, not nothing. But while sustainability is firmly entrenched in our heads and hearts, it hasn't made its way to our hands. We're not living it out via personal behaviors.

61% 39%

Americans say they most often choose personal comfort or convenience (61%) over the environment (39%)

35%

Only 35% of Millennials recycle newspapers, cardboard, aluminum cans, etc.

33%

Only 33% of Millennials adjust thermostat settings to save energy

Why the disconnect?

We know it in our heads. We believe it in our hearts. That adds up to a big-time culture shift – but it doesn't mean Americans are taking action.

Creating real sustainable progress requires more than culture.

It requires external forces like economic incentives and government regulation – that's how nationwide change happened in the past. But now, the game has changed.

Corporate leadership is the external force we need.

Companies, this is your OPPORTUNITY

You can help connect hands to heads and hearts – not by trying to convince consumers to change their personal behaviors to be more sustainable, but by changing their buying behaviors.

This is how you get Americans thinking about you – loving you – and buying from you because of your sustainability commitments.

READ THE FULL STORY AT
SHELTONGRP.COM/SUSTAINABILITY-CONSUMER-LOYALTY